

HELEN GOULD NOW OWNS A WAR SHIP.

It Is a Working Model of the Iowa and Steams Three Knots an Hour.

Miss Helen Gould is the possessor of a perfect model of the famous United States battle ship Iowa in full working order and ten inches over all, with six inches beam at deck line and seven inches at water line. It is fully rigged and has pivot guns in each turret.

On the forward deck there are four miniature thirteen inch guns on each side of the boat. These guns turn at will, and the power is twin propellers. The boat sails one hundred feet and then, by an ingenious contrivance, steers itself when the flag staff is placed in its socket at the stern. The butt of the staff is copper covered, and turns a switch, which in turn causes a cog-wheel connecting with the rudder to turn. The boat then turns within seven feet, and continues on its course in the opposite direction.

The war ship has a draught of six inches and weighs thirty pounds. When lighted it ready to sail. Miss Gould was presented with the beautiful miniature of "Fighting Bob's" ship by George Novello, of Burnett street, Elizabeth, N. J., last Saturday evening.

Novello, who was formerly a special policeman in Elizabeth, designed and made the ship, spending over three months on its construction.

The war ship is made chiefly of wood and steel, but with the use of some other materials. It is painted white, with a bright enamel gloss. Its dimensions are two feet looks like a transatlantic liner with the lights glimmering out of the port holes. Novello has the deepest admiration for Miss Gould's patriotic work connected with the war. He says that soon after he had completed the battle ship he resolved that she should have it as a personal recognition of her efforts in efforts in behalf of the soldiers and sailors. He traveled all the way from Elizabeth with his gift, and on reaching the doorstep of Miss Gould's residence, asked if she were in. On being told that she would not be home until the evening he left the gift, and returned to New Jersey. He says he has not heard from Miss Gould yet, but is sure she will appreciate the gift.

FLAMING CASE FOR JACKSON'S SHAFT.

It Will Surmount a Monument of Granite at Savannah, Ga.

A bronze cinerary urn, modelled after the famous mortuary vases of the ancient Greeks, will surmount a monument of granite to be erected in Savannah to the memory of General Henry Rooster Jackson. The classical memorial is the work of Carl L. Brandt, N. A. sculptor and director of the Telfair Academy of Arts and Sciences of Savannah, of which institution General Jackson was an enthusiastic member and liberal patron.

The urn is three feet high and sixty inches in circumference. On the top is a gilded cover representing flames. The public will have an opportunity to judge of its beauty, as Tiffany & Co. have decided to place it on exhibition in their establishment in Union square for a few days before shipping it to Savannah. Both the granite monument and the cinerary urn were modelled by Mr. Brandt. The vase is severely plain, the design of the sculptor being to adhere to classic simplicity. Tiffany & Co. have taken great pains to execute the work in keeping with the ideals of the sculptor.

General Henry B. Jackson was one of the foremost men of the South. He was born in Athens, Ga., in 1820. Nineteen years later he was graduated from Yale. In 1840 he was admitted to the Georgia bar. He became popular and successful at once, and in 1843 was made United States District Attorney. Five years later he left journalism, becoming editor and part owner of the Georgian. From the sanctuary he went to the bench the following year, having been elected to preside over the Superior Court of Chatham County. That position he held until 1853, when he resigned to take the post of United States Charge d'Affaires at the Austrian court. In 1855 he resigned and returned to Savannah, where he held several important positions. When the war with Mexico was declared he went to the front as captain of the Irish Jasper Greens. Later he served with distinction as colonel of a Georgia regiment. At the beginning of the civil war he was Judge of the Confederate States Court for Georgia. In 1861 he went to the front, becoming Brigadier-General and then Major-General. In 1855 General Jackson was appointed Minister to Mexico. That was the last public office he accepted. During all his public career since 1842 he had retained his membership of the Georgia Historical Society, and after his return from Mexico he devoted the greater part of his time to enriching the historical and artistic treasures of that society and the Telfair Academy of Arts and Sciences. In 1874 he became president of the Historical Society, which position he held until his death, May 23, 1895.

ROGERS'S RESTAURANT DESTROYED BY FIRE.

The well-known restaurant at No. 6 Park row, kept by J. J. Rogers, was destroyed by fire at an early hour yesterday morning. No one was in the building when the blaze was discovered, and the firemen had to chop their way through the floors from the third story. The loss is $15,000 to the restaurant and $10,000 to the building; fully insured.

The fire is supposed to have originated in some defective electric wires in the dumb-waiter shaft. Rogers owns the building. The ladies' dining room, which was on the second floor, was elegantly furnished and contained, besides some costly paintings, a handsome bronze and silver chandelier, elegant plate-glass mirrors and elaborately carved mahogany furniture.

that were saved from the big fire of the Keystone Carpet Mills in Manassas, Pa., a concern that is famed throughout the land for the superiority of their goods. These carpets have been only slightly damaged; in fact, so little it would take an expert to detect the damage.

THE ONLY THING THE MATTER WITH THESE CARPETS IS THE PRICE—AND THAT, ABOUT 33c. ON THE DOLLAR OF THEIR REAL VALUE.

In conjunction we will sell at genuine sacrifice prices the balance of the carpets saved from the big fire at the Harrison Mills, in Philadelphia, and the Matting that were wrapped in transportation. Such an onslaught of prices New York has never known. Read the CHASING prices, but don't delay.
